Want to promote your product on a podcast? Why not get their audience to subscribe to your podcast as well? Not only will this look good, it will get your audience interested in your product and/or service. Here are some ideas to help you promote your podcast: The best way to get around this would be to to use a service such as Podgal with a link in the description. You can easily get your registration link and send it to the person who recommended you. The reason I say you can use Podgal is that it makes it easy for you to then add a link in your description so that when people visit your website they can find the link to register and therefore, they can subscribe to your podcast. If you are going to do this, you will need to sign up for Podgal and then do the link. If this sounds too complex for you, then get them to subscribe directly in iTunes by clicking on the 'subscribe to podcast' link. Follow what they do. This is more than likely the way that they are doing their marketing. Make a note of what they do and learn how you can do the same and get more of your own customers and subscribers. Also, try to find if there are other other podcasts that are similar to yours - if there are, have a look at their channels. This can provide ideas for your own which you can utilise and build on. Doing the same as them or better As I mentioned at the beginning of this post, another thing that you can do when you find out a podcast is to have a look at what they are doing and do it better. There are many ways you can do this, but the most common are to write the words of the interview that they are doing as a blog post, where you have updates about your own product or service. 79a2804d6b
